Many children with disabilities also have problems with behavioral and positive behavioral support schemes that help these children succeed. Hero Images/Getty Images Harry's book Based on Wong's book The First Days of School, the routine is the backbone of a well-run classroom. Routine teaching in the first days is a good investment of time, as it helps organize a class around acceptable behavior, and the routine becomes unspoken rules that help students work productively. Altrendo Images/Getty Images Best practices dictate that the rules are simple and some in numbers. It is necessary to include at least one general compliance rule, such as treat yourself and others with respect. The rules must be quite broad that there may be a number of procedures that go along with the rule. Mark Romelli/Getty Images Great Organisation can help you start the year on a less stressful note. These suggestions are good for parents and good for teachers, as they help disabled students support most of their New Year. Instill confidence in your daughter and teach her to raise her hand and speak her thoughts and opinions. When Nesse French, a special education teacher, married her middle school sweetheart, she was determined to include her six students in her life-changing moment. French students, who all have Down syndrome and limits at ages 7 to 11, ring him down the aisle during celebrations as bearers and flower girls. French says his appearance made his special day feel like a fairy tale. How a special education teacher included her students in her weddingOct. 11, 201601:03Kinji French invited all six of its special aid students to be part of their wedding day. Courtesy Lang Thomas Leichhardt I wanted to grow up and marry my Prince Charming, and with me there's all my loved ones, the 25-year-old Louisville, Kentucky, native told parents today. French met her now-husband in seventh grade at Christian Academy of Louisville Rock Creek. She has been teaching at the school for three years as part of a program that provides an inclusive educational opportunity for students with Down syndrome because French then dedicated to her students. Josh surprised her with a marriage proposal on campus in front of children and faculty. After being engaged courtesy Lang Thomas LeichhardtShortly, the Frenchman asked Josh if his students could attend the festivities. When I told Josh that I wanted my students to be part of the wedding, he was totally supportive and very excited to include them on the special day, she says. We talk a lot about our students, and they said, well, they're kind of family to me too. Courtesy Lang Thomas during an awards ceremony at Leichhardt School, the French presented their students with wedding invitations. Courtesy Lang Thomas LeichhardtTraci, mother to 10-year-old Kate, was there when the Frenchman made the invitation out. I was a little emotional when [Kinsey] asked Kate and the kids. Traci says. I just felt like Kinsey and teachers treated our kids like family. He said his daughter Kate's face was illuminated when the invitation was received. I think he told everyone in town about being at The Kinsi Wedding. Traci says. Never miss a parenting story with today's newspaper!
